SUMMARY OF CHANGES

- C1 -- Changed "ABC" to "ASBC."
-- Changed "aerospace" to "air and space" or "air and space power" throughout.

EDUCATIONAL GOALS

A3000 Area Objective: Comprehend the significance of air and space power history and doctrine to modern warfare.

A3030 - FORGED IN FIRE, PART I

Lesson Objective 1: Value the significance of early airpower professionals and theorists (as well as their theories) and their role in the development of today's Air Force and the Air Force Core Competencies.

Samples of Behavior:

(L) 1.1 - Discuss early airpower professionals and theorists (as well as their theories) and their role in the development of today's Air Force and the Air Force Core Competencies.

(L) 1.2 - Share with others beliefs concerning early airpower professionals and theorists (as well as their theories) and their role in the development of today's Air Force and the Air Force Core Competencies.

Lesson Description: This lecture covers the evolution of airpower and airpower theory and doctrine during World War II. The lecture describes the people and events that helped shape the development of airpower and its employment. The lecture uses many historical references to help students understand the evolution of the Air Force Core Competencies.

Prerequisites: A3020, Origin and Theory of Airpower

Preparation: None

Optional: Review A3010, Theory, Doctrine, Objectives, and Strategy.

Rationale/Linkage: This lecture continues ASBC's overview of air and space power history, theory, and doctrine, which began in A3020, Origin and Theory of Airpower, and continues in A3040, Forged in Fire, Part II. Students can use these history lessons as reference points to illustrate how military theory is based on historical experience and analysis--that concept is discussed in A3010, Theory, Doctrine, Objectives, and Strategy. This lecture also inspires students to continue their life-long learning in the area of Military Studies.
